ADMISSION

Seven Members

(Secret Committee—Article V of By-Laws)

The Country Club's Forty Years

By CHARLES B. MERRILL

For a few years prior to 1889 there had gathered regularly a small group of riding enthusiasts which came to be known as The Bit and Bridle Club. The leading spirits were Mr. and Mrs. J. V. Painter and their daughter. Among other active members were Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Wade, General and Mrs. G. A. Garretson, Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Perkins, H. C. Rouse, Miss Elizabeth Todd, Miss Ray Todd, Miss Julia Clark, Edmund Clark, and D. E. Stone.

It was their custom to ride together one afternoon of each week. When weather permitted, they rode into the country, usually toward the shore of Lake Erie. As time went on it became evident that a definite meeting place would be desirable and it was suggested that the club acquire a small piece of property where a log cabin could be built and servants employed to provide suppers. The spot which most appealed to them was on the shore of the lake near the mouth of a small stream. Here was a grove of beautiful beech trees. This site was purchased and logs were brought there, but the cabin never was to be built. The thought of a club at this delightful location awakened the interest of Cleveland society, and, before the original idea could be carried out, the group was enlarged and more elaborate plans were discussed.

The Country Club was organized with a membership limited to 100. A charter was taken out, shares of stock were sold, and members were elected. Officers for the following year, 1890, were: Samuel Mather, President; Jeptha H. Wade, Vice President; Charles C. Bolton, Treasurer, and James Parmelee, Secretary.

Under the direction of H. C. Rouse, Chairman of the Building Committee, the first club house was built. It was located some little distance back from the shore of the lake and about the same distance from the stream. Informal in character, this club house was intimate and charming.

As the property was very limited in area there were no facilities for sports except boating and bathing. Members rode or drove in carriages to the club and it was almost entirely a social gathering place.

But in the early spring of 1895, Samuel Mather visited in New Jersey. Golf was being played at the nearby St. Andrews Club, and he was invited to play. He immediately became enthusiastic about the game and upon his return to Cleveland organized The Cleveland Golf Club and became its first President. Other officers were Horace Andrews, Vice President, and Robert H. Clark, Secretary and Treasurer. It was a subsidiary of The Country Club and only members of that club were eligible for membership.

The field lying between Lake Shore Boulevard and The Lake Shore & Michigan Southern Railway and extending east from Eddy Road to a small ravine, was leased from William Coit. A professional by the name of Shanks was employed and under his supervision a short nine hole golf course was laid out. Construction began in the spring, but the course, rough as it was, was not completed until the late summer.

At first golf enthusiasm was scant, but within a short time many members of the club were playing regularly. Among those who became proficient very early were John D. Maclennan, Benedict Crowell, T. Sterling Beckwith, Herbert McBride, Robert Crowell, and Sheldon Cary. When the National Amateur Championship was held at Onwentsia in 1898, McBride, Beckwith and Cary qualified for the championship flight.

The first president's cup was presented by John F. Whitelaw in 1896 and was won by John D. Maclennan. Among subsequent winners of the championship trophy were T. Sterling Beckwith, Benedict Crowell, Robert H. Crowell and Charles H. Stanley. These players also had prominent ranking in the early golf history of the state and the nation.

Prior to 1897 the golf club had no quarters of its own except a small shack located where the P. W. Harvey home now stands. That year a more substantial house was built at the corner of Lake Shore Boulevard and Eddy Road. This was used as a professional's shop, caddy house and locker room.

By 1898 it was decided that the links should be extended. The land between the ravine and Coit Avenue and extending north from the railway nearly to Lake Shore Boulevard was leased and the nine golf holes were rearranged to occupy the entire area.

A young Scotchman by the name of Joe Mitchell came to the club as its professional in the spring of 1899. He had been employed at the Royal Berlin Golf Club in Germany, and was an able instructor. Undoubtedly his coming aided the development of golf at the club and it continued to progress.

The Country Club was now ten years old. It was a thriving institution and occupied an important place in the social activities of Cleveland. In the spring of 1899, however, its beautiful club house was destroyed by fire and the membership was faced with the problem of rebuilding. E. W. Oglebay, President, assumed the leadership in the rebuilding program and by the following summer a larger and more elaborate club house was ready for occupancy.

In the meantime golf had become so prominent in the affairs of the club and so increasingly costly, that it was determined to segregate the golf club from the country club. Accordingly, in 1898, The Cleveland Golf Club was incorporated as a separate organization, although its membership was still made up entirely of country club members.

Destruction of the club house had left the golf club temporarily without a home and in 1900 it rented the home of Oliver P. Clay on Coit Avenue. By rearranging the holes, players were able to start away from the club house on Number One and to return to it on Number Nine.

It soon became apparent, however, that the country club and the golf club were essentially the same and it was decided to consolidate them. This was accomplished in 1902. The golf club gave up its Coit Avenue home and returned to the new country club. Again the golf holes were renumbered and an additional hole was built which extended from the club house to Lake Shore Boulevard. The new hole was Number One and the course became ten holes instead of nine as formerly.

This same year another event of interest to Country Club members, and of importance to the entire golfing world, took place. Coburn Haskell, a member of the club, conceived the idea of making golf balls with an elastic center. The first experiments with this type of ball were made at the Country Club and they were tried out by Joe Mitchell and several of the members long before they were marketed commercially. The coming of the Haskell ball revolutionized golf and eventually made obsolete many of the golf courses of the country. It is said that this ball was first used in an important championship by Jerome Travers when he won the British Amateur Championship in 1904.

The normal life of the club continued until 1906 when the club house and its entire contents were again destroyed by fire. Abram Garfield, Secretary and Treasurer, and an eminent architect, was chosen to design a new club house. His success is best attested by the sincere attachment which members of the club had for it throughout its many years of usefulness.

Golf demands were ever pressing. Eighteen hole courses were being built generally and the inadequacy of the ten hole course was obvious. In 1914, therefore, about thirty-five acres of land lying south of the railway tracks were leased for a long period of years. Eight additional golf holes were built and an eighteen hole course was provided which was used as long as the club remained in Bratenahl. The fourteenth, fifteenth and sixteenth holes were the same in 1930 as they had been in 1898 and were undoubtedly among the oldest in America.

But even these links eventually were to become out of date and unsuitable for the modern game of golf. By 1920 the flat course with its ancient cop bunkers, was passé.

Members began to dream of a new home and of a modern golf course. The encroachment of industry hastened the necessity for a decision, and in the fall of 1927 a special committee, consisting of President Edward A. Foote and Directors Edward C. Daoust and Edward L. Cheyney, was selected to study the whole problem of relocating the club. Early in 1928 this committee submitted a plan to the membership, which embodied removal of the club to Pepper Pike village, with assurance of ample financing by O. P. and M. J. Van Sweringen. The recommendations of the committee were approved. Edward C. Daoust, newly elected President, immediately appointed committees to take charge of the relocation. Edward L. Cheyney was chosen General Chairman and James F. Carroll, Jr., Vice Chairman. N. Thayer Chapin was made Chairman of the Decorating Committee, Harry L.

Grant Chairman of the Building Committee, Howard I. Shepherd Chairman of the Old Property Committee, Stouder Thompson Chairman of the Golf Course Committee, and Hamilton Wilson Chairman of the Grounds Committee.

William Flynn was selected as the architect for the golf course and Philip Lindsay Small as architect for the building. Construction began on the former in the summer of 1928 and ground was broken for the club house a year later.

The club house was placed on high ground, surrounded by old trees, with a commanding view of the broad fairways and wooded hillsides. The main building is of stone with wings of white painted brick and wide shingles. Architectually it is typically Early American and the decorating and furnishings throughout are in harmony with the Colonial spirit of the building.

The new club was formally opened with a tea on Sunday, August 10, 1930. On the following Saturday the President drove the first golf ball down the first fairway.

With surroundings of natural beauty, a magnificent yet hospitable club house, and a golf course of rare excellence, this club will remain a lasting tribute to the painstaking and unstinted efforts of the officers, directors and members of the committees who were in charge of relocation.

The Country Club Company

1. Immediately after each annual election the Board of Directors shall organize by electing from their number a President and Vice-President and shall elect or appoint a Secretary and Treasurer, who need not be members of the Board of Directors; all of said officers to hold office for the period of one (1) year and until their successors are elected and qualified. The office of Secretary and Treasurer may be held by the same person. The duties of these officers shall be such as usually pertain to their respective offices.

The Board of Directors shall have power to suspend, censure or expel any member of the club.

ARTICLE VI

2. No person shall be authorized to vote as proxy for a stockholder at any stockholders' meeting unless such person so authorized is himself a stockholder and such a proxy is filed with the Secretary prior to such meeting.

3. No person shall be permitted to sell or transfer his stock to any person who has not been duly elected to membership in the club.

4. A transfer charge of twenty-five dollars ($25.00) per share or half share shall be made for each share or half share of stock transferred on the books of the company.

ARTICLE VII

SEAL

The seal of the company shall be circular, two (2) inches in diameter, with the name of the company engraved around the margin and in the center the word "Seal".

ARTICLE VIII

STOCK

The club shall have a first lien on the several shares of its capital stock, both preferred and common, to secure all indebtedness of the several stockholders to the club for dues and supplies, which lien may be enforced after thirty days from the date at which said indebtedness became due by the sale of the share or shares of the stock registered in the name of the debtor on the books of the club.

The stock, common or preferred, registered in the name of one who has ceased to be a member of the club by death or any other reason, or who has sold his stock, common or preferred, to any person not a duly elected member of the club, may be sold and the proceeds thereof applied by the club as hereinafter provided; and each stockholder shall agree, by accepting his certificate or certificates of stock, common or preferred, that he will not sell or transfer said stock to any person whomsoever, except subject to the right of the company to re-sell the same as in this Article provided.

Any stock to be sold as in this Article heretofore provided, shall be advertised for sale to the highest bidder by the Treasurer, on the bulletin board of the club, for thirty days. All bids for said stock shall be in writing, sealed and handed to the Treasurer within said thirty days, and by him opened in presence of the Board of Directors at their first meeting after the expiration of the said thirty days; and upon payment to the Treasurer by the highest bidder therefor of the amount of his bid, there shall be issued to him a certificate for said stock.

If, for any reason, the Board of Directors should be of the opinion that the stock should be advertised for sale the second time, and, at the meeting at which the bids were opened, passed a resolution to that effect, the Treasurer shall at once proceed to carry out said resolution in conformity with the above direction.

So much of the proceeds derived from the sale of said stock as may be required to pay the indebtedness to the club of the person in whose name it is registered, shall, by the Treasurer, be so applied, and the balance shall be paid over to said former owner or his representative.

The preferred stock of the club shall be entitled to receive cumulative dividends at the rate of three per centum per annum, payable semi-annually, in equal installments of one and one-half per centum each, in preference to the payment of any dividend upon the common stock. Such dividends shall be paid by allowing or crediting the amount of the same upon the annual dues or accounts of the respective members holding such preferred stock; and, in case of the death of a member holding such preferred stock, such dividend shall be paid in cash until such time as the company purchases the stock of such deceased member, or until the stock is sold as provided in this Article.

In the event of the sale of the property and assets of the company, or, in the event of the dissolution of the company, the preferred stock of the company then outstanding shall be entitled to the payment of such sum of money thereon to the holders thereof as will pay the same in full at par and all dividends accrued and unpaid thereon, with interest on such unpaid dividends, before the payment of any sum upon the common stock of the company or any part thereof.

Section 1. Members shall be classified as follows: Life, Resident, Non-resident, Associate, Junior Class A, Junior Class B, Junior Class C.

Section 3. Men aged twenty-three years or older, having been elected by the admission committee, may become resident members by purchasing and holding one share of common stock of The Country Club Company, paying the initiation fee required at the time of qualification, and paying dues for the unexpired portion of the current quarter. The initiation fee for resident members shall be $800 plus $50 for each full quarter elapsing between August 1,

1930, and the time of payment, with a maximum of $1500. (See foot note.)

NON-RESIDENT MEMBERS

Section 4. Men aged twenty-three years or older, who reside more than twenty-five miles from the club house, and who do not engage in their principal business within twenty-five miles of the club house, may become non-resident members upon election by the admission committee and payment of an initiation fee of $100 and dues for the unexpired portion of the current quarter.

ASSOCIATE MEMBERS

Section 5. Unmarried women may become associate members upon election by the admission committee and payment of an initiation fee of $250 and dues for the unexpired portion of the current quarter. Marriage of an associate member disqualifies her at the end of the current quarter.

JUNIOR MEMBERS

Section 6. Any man between the age of twenty-three and twenty-eight years may become a junior member upon election by the admission committee. Class A: if he be an unmarried man, son of and dependent upon a member and matriculated in any college or university located more than thirty-five miles from the club house, his initiation fee shall be $100; Class B: if he be an unmarried man, not eligible as a Class A member, his initiation fee shall be $200; Class C: if he be a married man his initiation fee shall be $300.

Upon a Class B member becoming married he may qualify as a Class C member by paying an additional fee of $100.

The membership of a junior member terminates at the end of the quarter following his twenty-eighth birthday or upon his earlier disqualification by change of status.

Section 7. In the event of decease of a life or resident member his widow shall, if she desires and so signifies in writing to the Secretary within six months after her husband's decease, as a matter of right be entitled to all of the privileges and be subject to dues, duties and obligations of an associate member during her lifetime. In case such widow remarries such marriage shall disqualify her at the end of the current quarter.

It shall cooperate with other committees in supplying to those committees such personnel and facilities as may be necessary to enable such other committees to perform the duties assigned to them. September 17, 1930.

FOOT NOTE:

For the purpose of providing funds for the relocation project, on March 18, 1929, the Board of Directors levied a special assessment of $1000, payable over a period of five years, in quarterly installments of $50 each beginning April 30, 1929. This assessment was made applicable to present and future resident members by providing that as the installments accrued they be added to the initiation fee of new members, who would thereafter be required to pay only the unaccrued portion in the form of assessments. Before this assessment the initiation fee had been $500. Since then $300 of the special assessment has accrued, so that at this date the initiation fee is $800 and the unaccrued portion of the assessment, still to be paid by all resident members, is $700.
